Intelligence and Security Informatics Hsinchun Chen 2003-08-03 Since the tragic events of September 11, 2001, academics have been called on for possible contributions to research relating to national (and possibly international) security. As one of the original founding mandates of the National Science Foundation, mid- to long-term national security research in the areas of information technologies, organizational studies, and security-related public policy is critically needed. In a way similar to how medical and biological research has faced significant information overload and yet also tremendous opportunities for new innovation, law enforcement, criminal analysis, and intelligence communities are facing the same challenge. We believe, similar to "medical informatics" and "bioinformatics," that there is a pressing need to develop the science of "intelligence and security informatics" – the study of the use and development of advanced information technologies, systems, algorithms and databases for national security related applications, through an integrated technological, organizational, and policy-based approach. We believe active "intelligence and security informatics" research will help improve knowledge discovery and dissemination and enhance information sharing and collaboration across law enforcement communities and among academics, local, state, and federal agencies, and industry. Many existing computer and information science techniques need to be reexamined and adapted for national security applications. New insights from this unique domain could result in significant breakthroughs in new data mining, visualization, knowledge management, and information security techniques and systems.
