Derivative rules tell us the derivative of x^2 is $2x$ and the derivative of x is 1 , so: Its derivative is $2x + 6$. So yes! $x^2 + 6x$ is ... A function is said to be differentiable if the derivative of the function exists at all points in its domain. Particularly, if a function $f(x)$ is differentiable at $x = a$, then $f'(a)$ exists in the domain. In calculus, a differentiable function is a continuous function whose derivative exists at all points on its domain. In mathematics, a differentiable function of one real variable is a function whose derivative exists at each point in its domain. In other words, the graph of a differentiable function has a non-vertical tangent line ... We introduce the notion of differentiability, discuss the differentiability of standard functions and examples of non-differentiable behavior. We then describe differentiability of a function of two ... Differentiability is the foundation of calculus. When a function is differentiable, you can find its instantaneous rate of change, build tangent-line approximations, and apply powerful theorems like the ... If a function is differentiable at $x = c$, then it is continuous at $x = c$. However, a function being continuous does not guarantee that it is differentiable, as demonstrated with an absolute value function.
